What are projects?

You should think of projects as very important homework assignments. The same "academic integrity" rules apply for projects as for homework: The work you submit should be YOUR work (or your group's work), but you can work together and seek help in your work. (It is not like a take-home exam.)

There will probably be between 3 and 6 projects for the semester.

Groups for projects.

For some projects, I may ask you to work in groups of 3 or 4. More information on this will become available as needed.

Project presentation and typing.

In the case of some projects, I may ask that the paper submitted be TYPED, using your favorite word processing software. This will be announced sufficiently far in advance to give you time to type.

For some projects, I may ask for a ROUGH DRAFT. This will be due about 7-10 days before the final due date for the project. More information will be given about this later, if and when required.

Project I is an “individual” project (no groups required, each person should turn in a paper), typing is not required, and a rough draft is not required.
